EDITOR'S NOTE

We all want the best for our children when it comes to education, home life and healthcare. But a bustling, buzzing city like Shanghai offers what can seem like a dizzying amount of options. That's where the Urban Family Home & School Guide comes in.

Whether you are new to the city, moving neighborhoods, have a child transferring to a different school or working out the healthcare option that best suits you and your family, we have taken the myriad of options and laid them out in an easy-to-digest format.

The guide starts with the top schools in Shanghai discussing the ways in which technological developments have taken root in education, and the exciting ways this manifests itself in the classroom (planetarium, anyone?) That all starts on p12.

We then offer a comprehensive list of international schools (p24), bilingual schools (p38) and preschools and kindergartens (p46), with a range of options, including British, American,

Chinese and international curriculums.

We also feature the best in living in our homes and apartments section (p58), as well as relocation services (p76) and housing agencies (p78). Finally, we've got healthcare covered, with a list of world-class facilities across the city.

We hope it all helps you make sense of what Shanghai has to offer, and easier for you find the life you are looking for in one of the most exciting cities in the world. Good luck!

Enhancing Student Learning Through Thoughtful Use of Tech

By Daniel Mendes

Technology is ubiquitous and touches all parts of our lives. With it we are constantly connected, more efficient and have instant access to all manner of information and convenience. Technology is especially pervasive in our schools, where, if implemented correctly, it can make the teaching and learning process more meaningful for both teachers and students.

As a digital literacy coach at Concordia, I am a proponent of the RAT (Replacement, Amplification and Transformation) model of technology integration. RAT helps educators identify the best use of technology in the classroom.

Replacement is the lowest level of technology integration. Examples can be seen in classrooms where SMART boards have replaced blackboards, and where students use computers with word processing software instead of paper and pen.

Amplification is increasing the speed or amount of content produced by adding technology to an assignment. For example, rather than using a basic word processor, a student might present their research via a digital presentation. Instead of printing out their work, the student might submit it through a learning management system, where their teacher can view it and provide instant feedback.

Transformation is the ultimate objective when integrating technology in the classroom. In this scenario, the student works on projects that would not be possible without the use of technology. Perhaps as part of their research they are using the Internet to access university databases or Skype to interview a subject matter expert on the other side of the globe. Maybe the teacher has students using virtual reality to tour a hydroelectric dam, or coding robots for an engineering assignment. In these cases, students are learning more about a particular topic as well as getting practical exposure to technology and how it is used outside of the classroom.

The most important aspect of technology in the classroom, however, is knowing how and when to use it to enhance teaching and learning. As educators, we make it our aim to harness the potential that technology offers through thoughtful utilization. Yet we should also remember that even with all the benefits to productivity and efficiency, technology is merely a tool, and student learning should always be the focus.

Discovering New Worlds with Wellington's Planetarium

This year there's a new addition to the Wellington College science labs – the planetarium! Paul Lloyd, Head of Physics, is responsible for introducing this rather impressive piece of educational technology to the campus, and he's only just started to unlock its full potential.

First things first, what can pupils expect when they step into the new Wellington planetarium?

When most people hear the word 'planetarium,' they immediately think of a big dome that projects rotating images of the stars – interesting, but not that interesting, right? However, technology has moved on quite a way since the early planetarium forerunners, so now we have a piece of equipment that's small enough to fit inside a classroom and is much more versatile and engaging. Thanks to video processing tools, we can take software intended for virtual reality setups and project highly immersive environments across the dome's interior, all without the need for any headgear. When Wellington pupils walk into the planetarium they can expect to step into entirely different worlds.

Can you give us an example of what the planetarium is capable of?

Pupils have mostly been using the planetarium

as a space simulator. They can travel to any part of Earth and see how the night sky and stars look, with a very high degree of accuracy. They can go much further, too. If they want to see what Earth looks like from the Moon, no problem. If they want to check out the view from Saturn's rings, it's merely seconds away. It's an incredible tool for firing pupils' collective imagination and curiosity about physics and astrophysics, as they can simply pick a point in the universe and travel there instantly.

Are there more interactive elements to these kinds of programs?

Absolutely, they can venture into the heart of a volcano, or submerge to the bottom of the sea, getting a close-up look at conditions in some of Earth's less hospitable places. This is already proving to be a great way to let pupils explore naturally-occurring phenomena like tsunamis and earthquakes. They can adjust different settings to map the path and progress of these forces, which is helpful for understanding their impact more clearly.

You said that it's still early days for the planetarium. What do you have in store for the near future?

We're envisaging pupils being able to explore the trenches of World War One, take a walk around the Eiffel Tower, see the realities of conditions during the American Civil War and even jump into the middle of a live recreation of a Viking battle. These are exciting ways to bring different elements of lessons to life by taking pupils out of their textbooks and plonking them right in the heart of the action.

How have the pupils reacted to their planetarium lessons?

With lots of "oohs" and "ahhs," as you would expect! It's pretty much been a universal smash hit with pupils who have experienced it so far. That's very gratifying, because we're just starting to get to grips with what this equipment can do. I'm looking forward to seeing their reactions when we get into the more ambitious programs that are currently being tested.

Technology in Education at Shanghai Singapore International School

By Luiz Zicarelli

Ever since the first overhead projector was used in a classroom back in the 1930s and the term Educational Technology was first coined in the 1960s, many different technologies have invaded the educational space. This has allowed educators – who want to offer distinct and differentiated content – the opportunity to employ alternative approaches to learning.

Every teacher I know has at some point used at least one technological tool in their teaching practices, whether it's an activity, the use of a Learning Management System, sharing of online documents or a simple online tool for content enrichment and review.

At SSIS, our teachers and education professionals are encouraged to use technology as a means for education. In all divisions, educational technology supports students involved in various curricular activities, from a simple classroom setup (computer/projector/video) to a more complex and detailed computational thinking lesson with Scratch or Robotics, or even when applying a subject's content and skills into a STEAM project.

In addition, our After School Program provides opportunities for all our students: in primary school as co-curricular activities (CCAs) such as First Lego League (FLL) and Maker Space; and in senior school with programs such as First Tech Challenge (FTC) Robotics and the newly created Build Your Own School (BYOS).

As our students tend to acquire technological literacy much faster than in previous generations – in a comparison known as 'technology natives versus technology migrants' – the teaching process has been, and continues to be, transformed as a profession year after year, becoming ever more tech-oriented.

With this vision in mind, our school recently launched an EdTech Coaching Initiative, composed by our own teachers, to share their technical expertise with their peers. We hope to promote the use of technology in every classroom and lesson – thus transforming the students' learning experience.

Subsequently, our educators are capable and equipped to use all the available EdTech resources in our campus, from Learning Management Systems like iLearn and PowerSchool, to productivity tools in the Microsoft Office 365 platform, and future tools with AI and VR to produce transformational and empowering learning experiences. This places students at the center of enjoyable, engaging and satisfying lessons. It also enriches any institution's program and curriculum, thus helping to bring the whole community together.

STEAM at Wellington

A Seamless Integration of Technology and Curricula

At Wellington College International Hangzhou, we aspire to provide our children with the skills, knowledge and values to be able to thrive in the 21st century. While we are proud of our heritage and traditions, our educational philosophy is firmly looking towards the future. An integral part of being able to operate successfully in the 21st century is having a deep understanding of new technologies, as these will pave the way for the industries of the future. At all levels, we integrate STEAM into our curricula, allowing our students to turn theoretical knowledge into practical application. For example, the performing arts center music ICT lab enables pupils to combine musical ability with technical skills to create innovative and exciting compositions. Our Dukebox Radio allows pupils to express their creativity while learning about the scientific and technical processes behind broadcasting. Perhaps the clearest integration of STEAM and curricula occurs in our Design and Technology suites.

In our Design and Technology curriculum our students learn how to design and manufacture in the same way professionals do. Computer Aided Design and Computer Aided Manufacturing (CAD/CAM) are the driving forces behind industries such as electronics, architecture, fashion, automotive etc. The two biggest advances in design technology in recent years have been in laser cutting and 3D printing. With these two technologies, entirely new industries and categories of products have been made possible, and they have revolutionized the ways in which we can conceptualize and then turn ideas into a reality.

Laser cutting takes a two-dimensional design from a computer then uses lasers to cut a perfect replica out of a range of different materials. This process reduces manufacturing times, reduces waste and improves the quality of the final product. At Wellington College Hangzhou, our Design and Technology curriculum introduces 'Techsoft 2D Design' for creating the two-dimensional drawings that the laser cutter uses. Students will first learn the basics and make items such as phone stands, watch stands, and money boxes. Once they have learned the basic principles, and can use the software and navigate the hardware safely, they are then encouraged to design and manufacture their own products working from a design brief.

3D printing, while still a relatively new technology, is well known. 3D printing takes a 3D model designed on a computer then literally 'prints' it out, layer by layer, using a range of polymers or other materials. The benefits and possibilities from 3D printing are vast, with the potential to completely turn industries on their heads. As a result, many companies are investing in the development of 3D printing. Nasa have recently invested $73 million dollars in producing 3D printers that will work in space. There are also huge investments being made in the medical sector, with the aim of being able to print bones, organs and other body parts in order to help patients heal.

Throughout the year, Wellington pupils will design and print products using 3D printers. Before printing, students will create and render technical drawings, where they can trial colors, materials and dimensions; visualizing their work before committing to the final design. This application of real-life skills helps pupils understand the intricacies of design on an industrial scale.

At Wellington, we understand that the world is changing quickly. In essence, we need to prepare our students not only with knowledge and skills for today, but for jobs that don't even exist yet. STEAM is a critical component in this. We aim to expose our students to as many new technologies as possible throughout their time at the College, allowing them to become technologically literate, but with a purpose. At a time when technology dominates our lives, we must provide our students with the skills needed to use technology responsibly. Perhaps in the future, they will be the drivers of change, up-ending existing industries and making the world a cleaner, safer, more efficient place.

What Makes a Teacher Memorable

By Marcel G. Gauthier

Many of us remember a teacher from our youth, one who had a positive influence when we were in school. When we compare notes about that teacher, the qualities are very much the same:

They were inspiring. They loved their subject area and knew it well, they loved to teach and their enthusiasm was contagious. They inspired us to learn and grow.

They cared. They took an interest in us as individuals, showed a concern for our well-being, our progress and our success. How we fared in their class mattered to them and they showed it.

They challenged us. They pushed us to move beyond our comfort zone and see new capabilities in ourselves. They did not let us settle for what we did naturally well.

These qualities – inspiration, caring and challenging – are still at the heart of what makes a great teacher.

However, the world has changed, and what makes a great teacher has changed with it. What does the world today demand from great teachers?

Collaboration: The old model of my class, my students, my curriculum is no longer adequate. The best teachers are not private contractors; they work in collaboration with their peers to support all students. Our students, our school, our curriculum is now the mantra. The modern workplace demands dynamic collaboration – great teachers model that quality.

Focus on skills more than knowledge: Acquiring knowledge will always be important. A mathematical formula, a historical fact, a chemical composition. However, with today's technology, knowledge is just a click away. Great teachers do not position themselves as the source of knowledge; instead they focus on applying knowledge to real world problems and issues. They make knowledge relevant.

Growth mindset: Great teachers model the very passion for lifelong learning that they expect in their students. They grow in their profession, refine their craft and challenge themselves with new teaching strategies. They model continuous learning, so the students embrace it.

Not bound by classroom walls: The world outside the walls of the classroom is waiting, both in actual and virtual terms. Great teachers know learning does not begin and end in the classroom; it reaches beyond it.

Deep sense of ethical responsibility: Today's world poses social, economic, environmental, political and technological challenges that only a commitment to shared responsibility can overcome. Great teachers remind us that learning has a purpose beyond achieving accolades; it is about making a better world.

Great teaching has never been more relevant than it is today. We need to support it, acknowledge it, invest in it, celebrate it. Our children should all experience a great teacher in their lives, not only for their own growth, but for a better world.

Not bound by classroom walls

On October 21, a group of brave 5th grade students made their way to Yunnan to live and learn in a small village as they launched Microcampus 5, an expansion of SAS' award-winning Microcampus program led by Director of Menwai Program, Craig Tafel. These students – each accompanied by a parent – relied on experts in their beautiful host village of Xizhou to work through challenges, expand their understanding of other communities and grow as learners.

Deep sense of ethical responsibility

Caring for Coral, a Signature Program at SAS, enables middle school students to learn scuba diving, develop an awareness of marine ecosystems, and engage in real-world conservation.

Through partnerships with Stairway Foundation, middle school teachers Kevin David and Stephen Carozza have elevated the program beyond a dive and environmental service trip. Much of their story is about building a better ocean and world back on the shore.

How to Develop Language Skills in the Early Years

By Marianna Olivares, Pre-Kindergarten teacher at WISS

Language Rich Environment

The connection between all areas of learning helps children to have a better conceptual understanding of the content being explored. The classroom is the third teacher; it should be a place where children feel comfortable expressing themselves. We must create a learning environment where emergent bilinguals feel represented and valued, bringing their cultures into the classroom in a meaningful way.

Classrooms should also be rich in literacy to encourage children to learn. This can be done by displaying their work around the classroom, having diverse books in different learning spaces, having a range of writing tools accessible, and also modeling good literary behaviors.

Translanguaging

Translanguaging is a theoretical lens that offers a different view of bilingualism and multilingualism. Translanguaging refers to the language practices of bilingual people. Without a doubt, translanguaging pedagogical strategies should be present in the classrooms of an international school to be used to build on bilingual children's strengths, and help them to use their language repertory. Translanguaging will help children feel part of a community and to feel that their bilingual voice is important.

Strategies to develop language in early learners should be part of each day in the classroom. When planning for learning engagements, teachers should keep in mind how they can encourage children to use their verbal skills and how language diversity can be celebrated. Language development can be accomplished in many fun, playful and meaningful ways, while building Early Years learners' language skills and confidence.

As an Early Years educator, I am always looking for better ways to help my students strengthen their language skills. In multi-language classrooms, students often struggle to communicate what they know, want and feel, since their mother tongue is not always the same as the language of instruction.

Using language and communication with young children is crucial for their success in school and beyond. In my experience as an international teacher, I have had the opportunity to explore strategies to understand the most effective ways to help early learners to communicate.

The following are some of the strategies I use in my classroom to help my students develop their language skills.

Role-Play

Young children are curious little individuals who learn by imagining and doing, and some of the ways that help satisfy this curiosity is by pretending, exploring, discovering and learning through play. Playing with other children compels them to think more carefully about what they are saying and how to get their point across. Role-play also allows children to learn new words and expressions from those around them and reduces the pressure of the learning environment.

Hands-on Activities

Piaget and Vygotsky have shown that learning is done through tangible, concrete, social experiences. In other words, Early Year students learn by doing. Creating activities that allow students to use all their senses makes learning meaningful to them, making the content more understandable. Making learning tangible sparks curiosity and encourages students to ask questions.

Ms. Marianna Olivares comes from Caracas, Venezuela. She gained her Early Childhood Education degree in 2007 and has spent the last eight years living abroad in the USA and China. Mariana has worked in the education field for more than eight years. She enjoys being around children and is extremely passionate about making the world a better place through education.

Mr. Sam Lloyd is an ICT Teacher at Huili School Shanghai

Why Everyone Should Learn to Program

By Sam Lloyd

One of the core parts of the ICT curriculum at Huili School Shanghai is the computer science element of the course. One third of the ICT curriculum is dedicated to computer programming, but why do we see programming as an essential skill for our pupils to learn?

The benefits of a pupil gaining a firm grasp of programming principles have been proven by many studies, with research suggesting that learning such skills can increase the pupil's problem solving and logical thinking abilities.

There are benefits beyond logical thinking too; when you learn computer programming you learn how to check your work for details, how to apply logic and how to persist at any given task. Finally, you learn how to collaborate effectively, because much of the programming work done today is accomplished in teams. Accordingly, these timeless skills and learning behaviors our pupils absorb will endure far longer than any specific programming language.

Here at Huili, we start teaching it from grade 3, as soon as pupils begin their ICT lessons. We use a range of different apps and software to deliver a well-rounded computer science and programming regimen. Pupils start off using software such as Scratch and Scratch Junior to fit blocks or shapes of code together in order to move characters across the screen and make them interact with each other.

Even at this stage, pupils are starting to learn concepts such as iteration, which we will return to year after year. By grade 4 and 5, pupils are using apps such as Kodu and are starting to write full programs and create sophisticated games, which are fully designed, tested and polished by pupils themselves.

In grade 6, we begin learning how to write using programming languages. Pupils undertake a unit on MSW logo, a very simple programming language developed by Microsoft in which a turtle moves across a screen and makes different shapes. We also study Python for the first time. Python is the coding language which pupils will master if they decide to take the iGCSE in computer science in grade 9 and 10. In grade 7 and 8, pupils will continue learning Python as well as other popular web designing programming languages such as HTML, CSS and Java Script.

By the end of their time at Huili, all pupils will have had the opportunity to learn a range of different programming languages; to explore and experience the patience, persistence and hard work it takes to learn to program successfully. Some pupils will continue into the field of programming, web design and data science, and will put the skills they learn here at Huili to good use in their future careers. Others will not program computers in their daily lives, but research shows that the skills they have picked up in their computer science classes will help them to succeed in a range of other technical and creative industries.

Cambridge, England or Cambridge, Massachusetts? UK vs US Universities

By Beatrice Ugolini

Caught in the frenzy of securing a few admissions to the latest reported top universities before the end of their high school senior year, it is not uncommon for students (and their parents) to cast a wide net to encompass both US and UK universities.

Many view the two countries as insurances for each other, should one not yield the results they hoped. However, often the only consideration is the universities' reputations and world rankings, rather than the right 'fit'.

However, UK and US institutions are looking for very different kinds of students, and one needs only go as far as the application system to see that.

While the UCAS application requires a statement about why students are interested in pursuing the major they have selected, how their academics and extracurricular activities have supported that interest, and one academic reference alongside their grades, the Common Application (US universities also use several other application systems which will not be discussed here) requires students to submit not only a personal statement that should evidence their intangible qualities, but also a long list of extracurricular activities, several recommendation letters, and an answer to the prompt "Why do you want to attend X University?"

Where the British model emphasizes early specialization, the American model focuses on exploration and interdisciplinary connections. British universities expect students to devote themselves to the one academic major they have chosen, and do demonstrate the academic ability to do so. Students in the UK choose a major before applying to universities, and spend the remaining three years taking courses that fall within that major.

US universities look for a well-rounded individual who not only holds academic promise, but who also has demonstrated a commitment to a community and an ability to think about the practical outputs of their academic studies. Students can typically wait until their second year to declare their major (there are exceptions), and have the choice to major in one or two subjects – or major in one and minor in another – or even create their own majors (this tends to occur more in liberal arts colleges). Alongside the credits required by their major, students also have to satisfy a certain amount of elective credits, by taking core courses in writing, mathematics, science and political science.

Classes and assessments vary greatly additionally. In the UK, learning happens for the most part outside of the classroom, as students are expected to conduct hours of independent research and independent studying to prepare for a final exam that typically counts towards 100% of the student's final grade. The American system relies on in-class participation and small assignments throughout the semester to ensure everyone is keeping up with the coursework. The final grade awarded takes into consideration not only the students' performance in assignments and exams, but also the level of participation in daily class discussions.

With this in mind, students should be aware of the key differences in the approaches to teaching and learning that each country presents, and make a choice informed by their personal preferences and strengths.

HD Shanghai Bilingual School's Science, Design Thinking and Library Curriculum

HD Shanghai Bilingual School offers a three-part Science, Design Thinking and Library Curriculum which integrates the latest technology into its education syllabus.

Under the Science Curriculum, life sciences, earth sciences and physical sciences are explored in thematic units, preparing students for the creative and innovative world in which we live. Students visit the school laboratory weekly to carry out experiments. They are regularly given opportunities to ask meaningful questions about their world, design and evaluate experiments and collaborate to achieve team-based goals.

Design Thinking is a human-centered approach to solving complex problems in an ever-changing world. The detailed process consists of six parts: empathize, define, ideate, prototype, collaborate and test/reflection. The six steps are not sequential, but rather steps to be repeated and iterated based on the project's requirements and progress. Based on the learning objectives of different ages, as well as the content of science, art, ICT and other subjects, teachers lead students to conduct weekly design thinking lessons. From developing educational games for children to creating research videos with iMovie, from the campus canteen to the off-campus supermarket, everywhere can be a Design Thinking classroom, and there is never one standard answer to a question.

HD Shanghai Library is aimed at creating a friendly, inclusive and free reading environment for students. The curriculum is oriented towards students from prep to 12th grade. The purpose of this curriculum is to cultivate students to become lifelong learners. The library also boasts the Integrated Library Automation System (ILAS), developed by the Follett Corporation in the USA. This software is widely used by international K-12 schools around the globe. It features functions such as a custom-designed user interface for students of different age groups and 24/7 access no matter your location. Meanwhile, the school has also established ties with Shanghai Library to catalogue Chinese books, enabling HD Shanghai Library's system to be truly compatible and flexible in the management and search of books in both languages.

HD Shanghai Bilingual School's Read Write Inc.

This year, HD Shanghai has a specialized international curriculum for its preschools & kindergartens: Read Write Inc. (RWI). It's a systematic and effective method to teach phonics in prep and grade 1 classes. This rigorous and dynamic teaching resource is proven to create fluent and enthusiastic readers and is well suited to non-native English speakers.

As a literacy program developed by Ruth Miskin, one of the UK's leading authorities on teaching children to read, RWI has been taught in over 5,000 schools across the United Kingdom. It offers a transformational approach to teaching literacy, which raises results and standards of behavior across the whole school.

HD Shanghai uses RWI to systematically teach 44 synthetic phonics in the English language, helping students recognize words to 'sound-blend' while reading. After taking the course, children will become fluent readers, confident speakers and willing writers.

At HD Shanghai, all teachers are well-qualified and receive professional training on a regular basis. Teachers and students mainly focus on accuracy, fluency and comprehension during the entire process. The level of each individual child will be estimated and reassessed every five to six weeks with a scientific and rigorous approach, giving teachers a better grasp of students' performance so that they can make improvements best suited for each child.

One Person, One Language: How to Teach Language with Culture

By Pauline Guerin and Ryan Martin

In today's demanding academic environment, teaching is often tailored to passing some upcoming evaluation or formal testing. While it is important to gain high marks and succeed in the classroom, the pursuit often overlooks a crucial aspect of language development. Effective language education must recognize the humanity and cultures from which a language derives. Understanding this, we must then concern ourselves with the question, "Who is best suited to teach?" Luckily, the answer is us, our families and our communities – but with a certain caveat: that we ought to teach only the languages we are most intimately familiar with.

There are features of communication that are inseparable from our personal histories. They are the clay – as subtle as a mother's natural body language or as momentous as family tradition – we use to shape our individual sense of identity. Each peculiarity and tendency of speech has its origin in some specific moment where we learned it in its natural context, which gave it meaning. It behooves us then to specifically assign language instruction to those who embody an authentic representation of a language. The best and most available means we have to achieve this is the One Person, One Language (OPOL) strategy.

OPOL may manifest itself in many different ways, but the concept is quite simple: one adult speaks one language to the child (Dad speaks French with me, Mum speaks Chinese, and when we are together we speak English); one location has one language (at home, at school, at the grandparents' house); one activity has one language (Ballet in English, Baking in French, Kung Fu in Chinese); and children must be given ample opportunity to maintain and improve a language (aim to spend at least 30% of each week in a particular language setting). Learning language this way creates human connections that allow a child to feel a tongue belongs to them and become a genuine part of its community. In order to develop their confidence, instructors must be supportive and never make fun or tease. Additionally, learning must feel as natural as possible with room for mistakes and, ideally, no judgment or testing.

Bear in mind that OPOL requires a long-term commitment with a minimization of confusion and code-mixing. To further support the process outside of the home, we must choose schools that share our goals. Select schools whose teachers respect the One Person, One Language rule and whose classrooms have a good number of native speakers. Full-day immersion schedules (as opposed to half-days or less) complement the process by giving children all the time they need to warm up and feel comfortable exploring the language in all the day's subjects. Additionally, calendars that celebrate the different cultures and traditions of the world are of great benefit to the student, because familiarity with wider groups of people inspires metalinguistic awareness and creates bonds through shared experience.

As educators and parents, we must remember that language is not merely a tool for communication. It is an important marker that shows one belongs to a group. Therefore, we must choose our children's instructors wisely. The speech a child hears should be as rich and vibrant as a culture's history and traditions. When we learn to share and speak languages this way, the communication is sincere and our listeners do more than hear; they understand deeply.

A NEW ERA

Shanghai Circus World Just Got a Beautiful New Makeover

After 14 months of renovations, Shanghai Circus World has taken on a whole new look. As part of the makeover, the popular tourist attraction now boasts beautifully upgraded theaters that are equipped with even more high-tech elements that rival the world's most advanced theaters. The new and improved Shanghai Circus World officially opened to the public on 1st October.

In order to celebrate the new look of Shanghai Circus World and meet the demand of audiences at home and abroad, the classic production 'Era – Intersection of Time' has now returned for its final season.

The revamped building now features 1,400 color-changing star lights on the outside of the 'golden pineapple' sphere-shaped structure. The stars dot the gold dome and can change colors to make it truly shine. The installation of this 1,400-star lighting system was indeed a technological feat.

The design of the dome-shaped theater was inspired by the theme of 'light.' Not only do the stars illuminate the sphere, but the projected lights around the main building have been re-designed to highlight the main structure, creating a dazzling display.

A giant 'tree' is located right in the middle of the theater hall, as part of the theme: fireworks. The tree was created using the theater hall's original pillar. After several rounds of design comparisons, Shanghai Circus World finally decided to make the towering tree the centerpiece of the hall.

The wooden trunk and branches of the tree are adorned with roughly 56 light belts, totaling 1,300 meters. Just like the stars on the exterior of the theater, the tree's lights can also be programmed to create all sorts of amazing effects. In addition to the tree in the center, there are 13 columns around the hall and 96 light belts around the tree, which create an array of different light effects. From a distance, the scene looks like fireworks blossoming and shining in the sky. Hence the name 'fireworks'.

The theater's stage facilities also received large-scale reconstruction and upgrading. The stage now features more than 300 sets of lights in addition to upgraded sound systems, multimedia technology and high-tech performance equipment. These top of the line features can adapt to different performance elements, especially when it comes to acrobatic performances.

The seats of the theater are all updated and designed by a world-renowned Japanese seat manufacturer. The appearance, material and color echo the overall theme and style of the theater and has a simple color system of black, grey and gold.

Since its debut at Shanghai Circus World in 2005, 'Era – Intersection of Time' has been performed for 14 consecutive years and won numerous awards. After its last performance in the 'ERA castle' on 22nd September, 2019, the show officially returned to the newly renovated Shanghai Circus World for its final season on 1st October.

Being able to return to its new and improved home base is the perfect sendoff for what has been a wildly popular show for over a decade. The final season of the show will run for four months and will allow Chinese and foreign audiences to experience the classic performance in the elegant Shanghai Circus World.

The season began on 1st October and will run through 31st January, 2020. After that, Shanghai Circus World will unveil a brand new Era show, which is planned to be performed publicly at the end of April 2020.

Central Residences II

Warm and Welcoming Community Living

We’re at a birthday party held for all the children that live in the complex who were born in that month (they hold such a party each month, so nobody misses out!) and kids are happily gorging themselves on fruit and being taught arts and crafts by friendly staff, while parents chat away familiarly with one another. There is no mistaking the warm community vibe, and we think she has summed it up perfectly.

After singing happy birthday, and each child receiving a present, we head into the giant indoor play area to work off the cake in the ball pit and up and down the slides. We could have opted for a swim, a soccer, dance or kung fu class, a game of squash or tennis or hit the gym, sauna and Jacuzzi – one of the largest residential clubhouses in the city, all this and more is on offer.

And that’s only Central Residences I. We’re actually staying in newly-refurbished Central Residences II, conveniently located just across the road. And what a striking refurbishment it is, elegant and impeccable in every detail. The interiors are styled in warm brown woods and shining marble, and everything is spick and span.

Following the traditional Chinese style, all Central Residences II households face south, with floor-to-ceiling windows allowing the sun to pour in, and offering views of the historical tree-lined streetscape below, while simple furnishings enhance the sense of space and give the bright living spaces an uncluttered feel. There is floor heating for the colder months, air and water purifying systems, smart access controls and built-in child locks.

And then there are the extra facilities. A large courtyard where kids scoot about and play games – there are 123 children who live in Central Residences II alone – while parents enjoy neighborly relation leads to a fun playground. Next to this is a flower bed with plots for different families, and a flower growing contest in progress.

For rainy or high pollution days, there is the Cosy Corner; one half is an indoor play area with a big playhouse, slide, swing and various toys, while the other half contains plush seating where parents can catch up over the coffee provided or settle in with one of the many books or magazines on offer.

Also on offer is the state-of-the-art Kerry Gym, accessible 24 hours with smart facial recognition technology, and featuring the very latest in equipment, as well as an air purifying system. During our early morning workout, pm2.5 levels were at zero – miracles can happen!

The vibrant area offers a number of great restaurants within walking distance, including Summer Flower Garden, La Table d’Amour and Baker & Spice, while City Shop and Nicolson’s Butcher & Seafood, along with the usual convenience stores, are options if you want to stock up at home. On the health front Huashan Hospital, United Family Healthcare and ParkwayHealth are all within convenience, while HSBC and China Merchants Bank are on hand for money matters. Central Residences II also provide a 24-hour security and concierge service, to insure privacy and peace of mind, while a same day laundry service is available. Nothing is too much for the staff at Central Residences II.

We managed to pack as much of that as possible into our fun two-night family staycation. As it ended and we walked out past the playground and through the courtyard where a group of kids were having a great time kicking a soccer ball around, we couldn’t help but wish we could stay in this warm and welcoming community, with so many fantastic facilities. And of course the people, “It’s the people that count.”

SinoUnited Health's Dr. Frank Lorch

Introducing The Sports Medicine Team's Multiple Disciplinary Approach

Interview by Ned Kelly

Dr. Frank Lorch has over 20 years of experience treating patients with many kinds of injuries resulting from sports, high-stress environments and accidents using advanced techniques other than surgery. He treats pain due to bone, muscle and nerve conditions such as fractures, arthritis, tendinopathy, back pain, radiculopathy and carpal tunnel syndrome.

He values the many benefits of exercise to improve his patients' health and utilizes a team approach to healing, working closely with physiotherapists, chiropractors, osteopaths and TCM doctors. Regenerative medicine techniques like ultrasound-guided platelet-rich plasma injections are a special interest of his. We sat down with him to hear more about it.

What are the most common injuries you see and how can people prevent them?

By far and away, knee injuries. But shoulder injuries are common too. As for prevention, the simple answer is to stay inside! But this not realistic and certainly not what most sporty people want. There are many factors involved in prevention, ranging from diet to training techniques to appropriate recovery. One of the most important, lifelong strategies is to stay in shape – exercise regularly and don't get overweight. For injury prevention and health improvement, do both resistance training and aerobic exercise. Resistance training is especially important for injury prevention: the stronger your muscles are, the better able they are to protect your joints, ligaments and tendons.

You value a team approach to healing. Can you tell us about that?

As a multidisciplinary team, we're like a one stop shop. Of course, we can do x-ray, blood work and ultrasound. But we also do medication and physio; and we have chiropractors, osteopaths, and TCM doctors. We'll do whatever is necessary to get someone better. We can all consult with each other and also learn from each other, which is all to the benefit of the patient.

We also have cutting edge treatments. We are one of the only clinics authorized to do PRP – platelet-rich plasma – therapy, which is a very powerful tool in dealing with chronic ligament and tendon injuries, and even osteoarthritis. We are also working on procuring shockwave treatments and blood flow restriction therapy.

How much of the treatment is in-house, and how much do you give people the knowledge and tools to treat themselves?

Good question. We tell patients, "Zhe shi ni de zuoye," – "This is your homework." We are trying to educate patients: How do you recover quickly? How do you prevent that injury from happening again? How do you stay healthy? It takes work on their part, so we instruct them on things they should be doing when not at the clinic.

What about when it comes to surgery?

About 80% of sports injuries are non-surgical. An important part of our job is educating people about whether it is appropriate to have surgery, what is the best surgery, what is the right time for that surgery, and what is the best way to rehabilitate after surgery. Those are all very important for your long-term recovery. There are many instances of people having surgeries they either didn't need, were poorly timed, or were just poor technique. Our goal is to treat patients as we would like ourselves or our family members to be treated. That's the primary consideration; everything else just follows from that.

2019 Urban Family Kids' Halloween Weekend with Shanghai ARCHWALK

Over the weekend of October 26-27, the Shanghai community came together to enjoy the spooky season with activities and games for all.

To celebrate Halloween, Urban Family teamed up with Shanghai ARCHWALK to create a scarily good family event. Including a range of activities, costume parades and musical performances, it was a weekend for children to cherish.

To kick off the festivities, kids received a candy bag on arrival. Then, with spirits high, the action continued with an exhilarating skateboard performance by ICONX.

Families were swept up in the interactive games, pumpkin decorating and Halloween crafts. They also took the time to stroll around the market bazaar and meet many Shanghai-based companies offering services to families.

The entertainment continued with exciting Rocket Brain Science Show, as well as students from Shanghai Liaoyuan Bilingual School displaying their musical talents. This was followed by a parade, where kids showed off their creative and whacky costumes as they went trick-or-treating around Shanghai ARCHWALK.

On October 27, performances by SCIS and NACIS kept audiences on their feet.

Let's not forget all the prizes that were awarded over the weekend! Kids walked away with gift bags that included plush toys and accessories. A generous supply of coupons to some of the top family-friendly venues around town were also given away.

The weekend was a tremendous success, with over 5,000 children and parents attending the event. As the mall emptied, happy faces were seen on all children who attended the Urban Family Kids Halloween Weekend.
